Vermiculture

The term sericulture mainly refers to the scientific process of cultivating worms or artificial called vermicomposting and is formed by the process in which earthworms consume the farmyard manure and roughages in addition to the wastes from farms and thereby producing it. The produced vermicompost is rich in terms of nutrients and other plant growth-promoting substances, which are capable of supplying necessary mineral nutrients to help and sustain plants' growth.

As our college is very far away from the town the town the municipality ghanta gadi do not come to collect the waste. so for this problem department of zoology practice a vermiculture on a small scale. We have prepared a single bed of bricks for the vermicomposting. The organic material required is collected from the college campus, specially the fallen leaves and thrashes of trees.

The advantages of the vermicomposting at college level is that we don't have to burn the material and unnecessarily create air pollution. The manure that is produced is used for the plant of the college campus. The project that department has build is also useful for the practical demonstration of the topic related to vermicomposting.
